Q: Where can I find open source alarm clocks? I'm looking for an open-source alarm clock application for my Raspberry Pi, with English input (it needs to be configurable via the serial port).

Alarms are easy: `sudo apt-get` install gtick, or maybe something easier still. Storing data (like a time to trigger an alarm next time you're at home) is harder. Google and the like doesn't seem to be helping. A: GTick is the application you're looking for: GTick is a simple alarm application for the Linux desktop. It allows you to easily create alarms, and configure them. It is available in the repositories of most Linux distributions. You can download it and its dependencies here: [Studies on the structure and the absorption of an intranasal glyceryl trinitrate gel]. "Mythical blends the strategic feel of, say, Magic: The Gathering, with the roll of the dice of a dice game. You can use it to learn game rules, but that's an afterthought. Instead, you use the cards to create and influence your deck, and from there you let your deck, and your opponents', strengths do the rest."4/5 Pocket GamerPlay

Mythical: "Mythical is a deck-building game that sits between the deep strategic depth of a card game and the simplicity of a dice game, but it lacks the tactical depth of both. In its place, we get the interplay of two boards, six cards and a set of rules that provide all the foundation you need to create a unique deck."4.5/5 RPG SiteMythical: "Mythical is a deck-building card game for two players in which you create a deck of up to five cards and then place your cards into a board. Your two deck-building adversaries play as either a dragon or a human, and play through your boards, your decks, and your actions to stop you. The rules are simple, the artwork fantastic, and it's a game that takes just 20 minutes to play."4.5/5 Board Game GeekMythical: "This is a game I just played my first time with and got a kick out of. It's got a great artwork, simple rules and it's easy to learn."4.5/5 GeekDadMythical: "Mythical is a deck-building game, played with a board with a 'dice board' in the middle of it. Instead of building a deck of cards, the player builds a deck of battle cards. In this sense it's more akin to Yahtzee than Dominion. The player then places their cards into a 'dice board,' a circle of dots that correspond to the other side of a die, and rolls that die. The card represents the battles they fight and the dot is the roll of the die. The player can use any card they like during the game, adding to the strength of their battle cards, but they have to play their cards when they can - which isn't always easy. After that the player places the rest of their cards in a different part of the board, giving them a varied board layout. They can play their cards there too, to give their opponents a tougher challenge."3.5/5

Vincere Totus Astrum (; to win all [be victorious, or to be rescued from defeat] astra or, 'all the way astride the star' Latin: VIÆIREC OMNES ASTRUM) (translated by Sarah Arneson and Muriel Young as All Power to the Lord) is a 1999 novel by the American author John Lynch, published by Atheneum. The novel was nominated for the 1999 National Book Award for Fiction. The title comes from a quotation, "qui nos liberabit a bono" ("who shall deliver us from evil"), which appears in the Greek New Testament in the opening verses of the Book of Romans. The full verse is, "Qui nos liberabit a bono, nos reddibit ei quod debemus" (Romans 1:13). Plot summary The novel is a coming-of-age story about science fiction author Lance Harden, who grows up in small town Vance, Illinois, in the southern United States during the 1960s. The story deals with the relationship between the protagonist, Lance, and his mother, Sally, whom he suspects is having an affair with the principal of his school, Mr. Myers. Lance is referred to as the son of Sally and the school principal, Mr. Myers. Sally works at a phone company and dreams of being an astronaut. Mr. Myers is named "Dr. Cancer." Dr. Cancer is a surgeon, and he currently owns property on the moon. He dies of lung cancer after having learned of Lance's prowess with space weaponry, though it's just a rumor. Lance loves to spend time in outer space, and he uses his astronaut coordinates as a password on college message boards with his space friend, Diz. The opening scene of the novel sets the theme of the story: He spends most of the book in outer space learning about astronauts and rockets. He is a student at the famous space academy, the Accelerated Planetarium. One night Lance gets drunk and is caught by Dr. Cancer. In the resulting altercation, Dr. Cancer is rendered unconscious. Lance hopes his mother would rescue him from Dr. Cancer when he is freed, however, she is killed by him in the process. Lance vows to rescue her. He then goes to his father's house, who is also stabbed by Dr. Cancer, though it is not certain if he dies.
