Q: How to check if a mapping exists in Rust? I am trying to find a string beginning with a certain prefix, and if such mapping does not exist, I want a string beginning with another prefix. I am using the following code:

let mut vlists: BTreeMap = BTreeMap::new(); vlists.insert("literal".to_string(), BTreeSet::new()); fn main() { let s: &str = "literalapi"; match vlists.get(&s) { Some((name: &str, sign: &BTreeSet)) => { println!("Name : {}", name); println!("Strings in {} : {}", sign, sign.len()); } None => println!("String {} not found", s), } }

 However, it always returns None, even if the whole name literalapi, not literal is in vlists. Am I doing this the right way, or is there a better way in Rust to do this? Also
